VENEZUELA MUST GIVE AN EXPLANATION.

Colombians Have Bought Goulds Old Yacht and Prepared Her for Fighting.

New York, September 3.—George J. Gould's famous yacht Atalanta, converted into armed cruiser and provided with rapid-fire guns of the latest pattern, will leave this port at an early date bound upon a mission about which the representatives of the Colombia republic, to which she now belongs, maintain secrecy.

Information brought by travellers returning from Central America indicate that the United States of Colombia, having suppressed a recent rebellion of unusually sanguinary character, is determined to call Venezuela to account for permitting the rebels to organize there and cross the line into Colombia. The Atalanta, noted for her speed, was purchased under special instructions from the Colombian government on July 20. Since that time the yacht which was built for Jay Gould, has been undergoing a quiet transformation into a war vessel. Her armament consists of six machine guns and a rapid fire 4.7-inch rifle mounted forward. The day of the Atalanta's departure and her destination are diplomatic secrets.

According to trustworthy advices from Colombia there is a strong popular feeling against Venezuela as the result of the recent internal struggle. Charges are openly made that Venezuela instigated the rebellion and gave comfort and aid to the enemies of Co-
